SPEAKING MY MIND

Four months ago it was enough to say "Anybody But Bush." That three word phrase was the watch cry of a nation frustrated with the presidency of a man who had neither earned nor won the office he occupies; a man who has taken our nation to war over a vendetta with a leader who once threatened his daddy; a man who has squandered both America's international goodwill and its budget surplus, replacing both with deficits that will never be retired.

Four months ago that was enough. But with the election only days away—the most important election most of us will ever take part in; an election that will define who we as a nation are to become for the next several generations—there should be something more compelling driving our choice than "Anybody But Bush." As a gay publication, it would seem our choice for President would be clear, and though we think we'll choose wisely in the end, the path to that decision won't be as plain as we have a right to expect.

"But wait," you say, "George Bush is against gay marriages. He wants to amend the Constitution to ban them." Yes, that's true. But sadly, so is John Kerry. And so is his running mate, John Edwards. Now Kerry opposes a federal amendment, saying the choice should be up to the states. But then he says that his own state of Massachusetts should add such an amendment to its Constitution. And both of the Johns joined Bush in applauding Missouri when it passed its own anti-gay amendment.

"But wait," you say, "Bush finagled his way out of the Vietnam War and then skipped out on the easy service his daddy had arranged for him, while John Kerry fought and bled and won medals and stuff." Yes, that's true, too. But that was 30-something years ago—Does anyone really care?

"But wait," you say, "Bush stole the election." Actually, no he didn't. He and his daddy's cronies staged a bloodless coup. And then the group of them proceeded to turn our democratic government into a fascist government (before you conservatives scream, check your dictionaries). And they figured out several ways to make the rich—themselves, that is—richer, and the not-rich—almost everyone else, that is—not only poorer but also much deeper in debt. And they started a war to get the bad guy who attacked us on 9/11, and when they couldn't get him they started another war to get a different bad guy. And they killed three times as many innocent civilians chasing after bad guy number two than bad guy number one had killed when he came after us. And they stripped nearly every civil right from our Constitution, except the right to own guns, then broadened that right by making it okay to own assault weapons again.

All of which makes it clear why we should vote Bush out, but not why we should vote for the other guy; though perhaps the chance to rid ourselves of the worst President in our nation's history is enough of a reason to vote for Kerry.

Let's face it: American elections will never be truly democratic until ballots come with an option for "None of the Above." Some day, maybe. But for now, one of these two men is going to be President and we need to make a choice. Out of a sense of democratic self-preservation, DaKine magazine endorses the one who isn't George Bush.

John Kerry may not be the best choice, but in this watershed election, he is the only choice.

Uncle Andy's response to an angry barebacker in last month's issue caused quite a stir. Here are two of the responses we received. (No one spoke in the barebacker's defense. Strange, since he thinks he's in the majority.)

I am an HIV positive man who cannot thank you enough for reminding those who don't have this virus to STAY THAT WAY. This barebacking idiot who wrote to you last month is probably without symptoms and not having to endure the awful side effects of the 10 to 12 medications I have to take daily. AIDS is not worth anyone's idea of "liberating" natural sex.

HIV is not a "small price to pay." I have had it for close to twenty years and can tell you first hand it is a lot of work just staying functional. At least I got it when there was no information available. I couldn't bear life knowing I got myself infected intentionally. When drug resistant strains of HIV wreak havoc on their hosts, it isn't going to seem like a small price.

I have never had unprotected sex with another HIV poz man, even though they thought there was no risk. I have been able to stay on the first cocktail of medications with an undetectable viral load and a high T-cell count. Had I been stupid enough to engage in unprotected sex things would be very different. Barebackers and giftgivers are morons who are delusional and I think their retardathon is [exact-ing] a huge price that I hope can actually be paid.

Go ahead and "live your life" and overwhelm the limited resources that our community has fought long and hard for. Put your family and friends through sleepless nights. Just wait till you can't have sex because you're not so [desirable] anymore, or you can't get hard because medications kill your libido. Well, at least you'll have your memories and a medicine cabinet full of chemicals that will make you feel so [horrible] it will keep your mind off what a fool you were in some lust filled moment in California years ago with a man who is probably dead. Party on.

Andy, you keep telling your readers to have enough self-respect to protect themselves from these criminals. Because that is what they are: not men.

—Eric System

Thanks for your response to the fool who cautioned you about your attacks on UN-SAFE SEX. I have a partner, we are not monogamous, we play. I pray he has safe sex. Our relationship isn't for everyone. Both of us have had to make concessions and adjustments over the course of our time together. We have been together 10 years. At 52, I have watched as 100s [of] dear close friends died of this horrid infection. And the count goes on.

Kick their asses, Andy. I'd like to kick their asses for throwing up their butts and expecting me to risk my life. And they have the nerve to look at me like I'm the stupid one for not just doing their bidding. Idiots and scallawags, worse yet... murderers. I hope that you reached your audience and made them think. It sure riled my nerves.

New Gay Business Group Forms

The Honolulu Executive and Business Alliance, O'ahu's new association for GLBT professionals, held its first mixer in September at Tryst restaurant. Mayoral candidate Duke Bainum was the special guest.

The Alliance was formed to provide members with an opportunity to share resources and to direct business to each other while improving both their businesses and their professional lives as they learn from each other.

HEBA plans to hold monthly networking meetings with key speakers of interest to its members. It also plans to become actively involved in community events as a means of eliminating negative stereotyping about the GLBT community. For more info, visit www.hebaorg.org.

Man Banned for Visiting Gay Website

A local gay man has filed a federal lawsuit after a new Hawai'i state law designed to allow officials to remove squatters from public campgrounds was used to ban him from the public library for one year because he visited a gay website on a public library computer.

Carlos Hernandez was logged into gayhawaii.com

when a guard notified him he was banned from the library for viewing pornography. Gayhawaii.com is a local resource that provides information on events, travel, real estate and other services for the gay community; there is no pornographic content on the site. The guard claims the site was pornographic because there were pictures of shirtless men.

The ACLU, which filed the suit on behalf of Hernandez, says that the law is unconstitutional because it allows authorities to pass judgment and punish an individual without benefit of due process or opportunity for appeal. According to the lawsuit, under the law "it is enough that the police officer or authorized person finds the individual to be unsavory or disagrees with the content or message of the individual's speech or activity."

Coming Out Day Looms Large

National Coming Out Day, an annual event timed to mark the October 11th anniversary of the 1987 Gay March on Washington, is striving to get more young gay men and women involved in American politics. Organizers have announced that this year's theme is: Come Out. Speak Out. Vote.

PUBLISHER'S MESSAGE

I usually use this space to tell you about all the exciting things going on in our community, and this month there are plenty. Two items of note: The annual Hawai'i International Film Festival (HIFF to its friends) and the Honolulu Symphony Orchestra and Chorus presentation of Haydn's The Creation (with our own little editor, Andrew, crammed somewhere in the middle of the 150+ professional-level singers that make up that group). This month, however, I'm going to ask that you check out our calendars on pages 14 & 19 to find out what else is happening.

Why? Because this month I want to introduce someone very special: (big drum roll) Raul Lanz, the new Account Executive that has joined our talented little 'ohana of editors, writers, journalists and graphic artists. Last month I shared a brief bio of our new sibling; this month I want to tell you just what he'll be up to here at DaKine.

As an Account Executive, Raul will be working closely with the many local business leaders that actively support our community and this magazine, helping them identify ways to improve their visibility among our readers while making their advertising more effective. He will also be striving to demonstrate to more members of our business community the value of advertising in Hawai'i's most respected gay magazine.

With Raul's expertise and direction, we anticipate that a record number of gay and gay-friendly businesses will be able to prosper as part of a family with some of the highest disposable earnings in the nation. New advertisers will want to look at our rate sheet on page 38. With this as a starting point, Raul will work with you to develop a promotional campaign that works in a community that truly remembers and rewards its friends. Raul can be reached at 808.393.3778.

With our 6th Anniversary fast approaching, there isn't a day that we at DaKine don't thank the Fates for the loyal readers who have never wavered in their steadfast support of this magazine and its mission. We love you all. Aloha,

Mainland. Marriage Watch

Voters in Hurricane Ivan-ravaged Louisiana have passed an amendment to their state Constitution to ban gay marriages, civil unions and the recognition by judges or the legislature of such unions from other states where they are legal. Critics claim the amendment will also be used to forbid contracts between both gay and non-gay couples. Only 27% of the state's voters visited the chaos-riddled polls, but 78% of them voted in favor of the discriminatory amendment; meaning the Constitution was amended by a mere 21% of eligible voters. Opponents of the ban filed several suits within days of the final results. In addition to challenging the constitutionality of the amendment, they are angry that voting machines were not made available to New Orleans voters until past noon, while machines throughout the flooded parts of the state were moved to unidentified locations.

The Spanish Parliament is voting this month on a bill that will make it the third country in Europe to legalize same-sex marriage. Even though Spain, with a population that is 95% Roman Catholic, has been the target of substantial anti-gay pressure from the Vatican, recent polls show that nearly 70% of its citizens support same-sex marriage. The bill, which is being pushed by the new prime minister, is expected to pass easily.

Manitoba has become the fourth Canadian province to allow gay marriages, joining British Columbia, Ontario and Ottawa. Along with the Yukon Territory, 80% of Canadians now live in an area that allows same-sex marriages. The case, filed by three couples, was decided quickly once the federal government announced it would no longer challenge such lawsuits. The ruling judge cited an earlier decision from the Yukon, declaring that "the traditional definition of marriage is no longer constitutionally valid in view of the provisions of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms." The courts in Nova Scotia and the Maritime Province are currently considering challenges to the law, with a favorable decision expected from Nova Scotia just days after this magazine went to press. A Supreme Court hearing on the proposed federal law allowing same-sex marriage is scheduled for this month. Quebec has indicated it will challenge the new law, not because it disagrees with gay marriage, but because it doesn't believe churches should have an exemption.

A state judge in New York has refused to invalidate the dozens of marriages that were performed earlier this year by the mayor and others in New Paltz. He refused the request made by a conservative group because they had not included the married couples as defendants in the lawsuit, thus denying them the opportunity to be heard in the case. The conservative legal group, Liberty Counsel, says it will refile the lawsuit asking the state to declare the marriages null and void. Also in New Paltz, charges have been dismissed against two clergy members who continued performing same-sex weddings after the courts had halted city officials from doing so.

The citizens of eleven states will be voting next month on amendments to their state Constitutions limiting marriage to one man/one woman. Louisiana and Missouri have already approved their amendments. Several amendments will also ban civil unions and "marriage-like" arrangements between same-gender couples.

The goal of this year's drive is to give young gays the courage not to just come out of their closets, but to then speak to their families, friends and coworkers about issues of importance to them.

A recent poll by the Human Rights Campaign found that only 32% of out gay men and women discuss public policy issues with parents, and only 46% bring up these concerns with siblings. The HRC believes that more open discussions of this sort will help the non-gay world realize that gays are everywhere.

Life Foundation Seeks Help

The Life Foundation, one of O'ahu's leading providers of support and services for people living with HIV/AIDS, is looking for transportation volunteers, hair stylists and massage therapists. Contact Adrienne at Adrienne@lifefoundation.org, or call 521.2437.

The Foundation has also begun early sign up for the 2005 Starbucks AIDS Walk for Life on May 15th, 2005. Participants will walk the 5km circumference of Kapi'olani Park to raise both money for and awareness of the ongoing fight against HIV/AIDS. The walk also serves as a tribute to those who have lost their lives to this epidemic. To register, visit www.aidswalkhawaii.org, or email hale@lifefoundation.org.

Chorus Holds Winter Concert

The Honolulu Men's Chorus, under the direction of Larry Cross, will be presenting its 15th Annual Winter Concert on November 20th. Having saluted their favorite light music in their last show, they will be presenting a more serious side in this performance. Special highlights of the evening include Brahms' Alto Rhapsody and the Liszt Requiem.

The performance begins at 7pm and tickets are $10 in advance and $12.50 at the door. The concert will be held once again at the Community Church of Honolulu, 2345 Nu'uuanu. Tickets are available from any chorus member, by calling 389.6983 or by email at wintershow@hawaii.rr.com.

LA Outlaws Unsafe Sex

In an attempt to curb the recent rise in new cases of HIV in Los Angeles, the LA County Board of Supervisors has passed a law that requires bathhouses, sex clubs and other commercial sex venues to prevent patrons from practicing unprotected sex.

Businesses that provide sites for customers to actively engage in sex will now be required to obtain a permit for their establishment, which can be revoked if health inspectors, making unannounced visits during peak hours, discover patrons engaging in unsafe sexual activity.

The law forbids unprotected anal and vaginal sex, but only discourages—without prohibiting—unprotected oral sex. The law must also be approved by the Los Angeles City Council.

Voters are told they must "vote Republican to protect our families" and to defeat "the liberal agenda." The mailing also explains that the "liberal agenda" includes removing "under God" from the Pledge of Allegiance and legalizing partial birth abortions.

Though denying knowledge of the mailing, Ed Gillespie, Chairman of the RNC, says that because same-sex marriage is a legitimate issue in the election, the pamphlet is perfectly valid.

Abused Prisoner Can Sue Prison Officials

A federal appeals court has ruled for the first time that a Texas inmate can sue state prison officials for damages due to discrimination based on sexual orientation. The case involved a Texas man who for 18 months was subjected to daily abuse and degradation by a prison gang that sold him as a sexual slave and repeatedly raped him.

The man filed regular grievances, letters and complaints with prison officials. On seven separate occasions he appeared before the classification committee for his unit to request that he be placed in safe-keeping or protective custody. Every request was denied, officials telling him he needed to either "fight or fuck," or that he should "choose someone to be with" if he wanted protection from rape.

After the ACLU intervened on his behalf, prison officials finally moved him into a wing set aside for vulnerable prisoners.

Swaggart Says He'll Kill Gays

Television evangelist Jimmy Swaggart, still trying to rehabilitate himself after his arrest for soliciting a prostitute, threatened to kill gays in a recently televised sermon. In the program, taped at his New Orleans ministry, Swaggart rambled quite a bit before turning to the subject of gay marriages.

According to a transcript provided to 365gay.com, Swaggart said: "I'm trying to find the correct name for it... this utter absolute, asinine, idiotic stupidity of men marrying men. ... I've never seen a man in my life I wanted to marry. And I'm gonna be blunt and plain; if one ever looks at me like that, I'm gonna kill him and tell God he died."

His congregation applauded his comments.

No Decadence for Fundamentalist

A New Orleans judge banned Reverend Grant Storms, a fundamentalist preacher known for his strident anti-gay opinions, from September's annual Southern Decadence celebration in New Orleans. In past years Storms and groups of his followers have attempted to disrupt gay activities during the event, which draws over 100,000 partygoers each year and brings millions of dollars into the city.

He is best known for videotaping the decadent parts of Southern Decadence and replaying the tapes for right wing groups and politicians in an attempt to get legislators to outlaw the party. Last year he filed suit against a bouncer who would not let him into a gay bar to protest. The case was thrown out of court.

Her name is Girlina. She's been there and done it! Maybe you've seen her...

Walkin' that Dolce & Gabbana runway? Showin' out Chic on the Wigstock stage? Or seein' virgins in that Jada Pinkett Smith movie? Coulda been y'all danced together in Japan, Europe or Canada? Or can it've been the Paris Opera House? Maybe Madonna's Birthday Extravaganza? Or perhaps P. Diddy's Raisin in the Sun after-party? While the people was partyin' on the dance floor, Girlina was tearin' it up on the turntables. And you?

Do you know where you're going to? Better be Hula's, to look, listen and learn while you let the beauty with the beats make you feel it. This right-on sister is a movie star/supermodel/DJ-in-demand, and soon she's jettin' across the Pacific to spread her gospel and good-vibes, so's to get y'all goin'.

Believe it: Hula's is at it again. After Jackie Beat's successful, crowd-pleasing 3-nite run, the latest lovely in their talented tourist line-up is New York City's own DJ, Girlina. She will be on deck at Keoki, Inc.'s new night, Metro, Thursday, October 14th. Then former K Klub cutie Olllywood will feature her at Beautopia, on Saturday the 16th.

"It's very happy!" Girlina says of the music she likes to play. "Eclectic! I swirl everything from Hip Hop to House, Old Skool, Freestyle... Float on the musical journey I take you on; it's a trip..." And trust: This girl's gone 'round the globe, too, crossed the line a few times and seen a sight or some, I'm sure.

So, yo! Girlina invites you to go with her flow... but, whoa! She'll have you know: "Music is not about boundaries: It's unity. And with that comes knowledge and being schooled." Consider yourself warned: Move to her groove and you might get taught, if you know it or not! Listen for lessons...

This girl don't slack on her studies neither! Over ten years Girlina trained in everything from modern ballet to tap and jazz, while she hiphop, skip and a-jump-started her stardom by just throwin' down what she caught on to. Her signature style and artistry were incubated in Manhattan's East Village Crowbar, and she's grown up to be a celebrated worldwide star every since!

Girl's gone and strutted her stuff onstage and screen for designers like Thierry Mugler and D&G, to bustin' moves in movies like Wigstock. She shined a supporting role in Woo, as Jada Pinkett Smith's fortune-tellin' friend, "Celestial". And of course there's Always Something Better, in which she played "Mona", alongside our favourite Maui transplant Candis Cayne. Ha Ha! Who else but they could show a girl how to be a true diva!

Get it: Girlina's gone from sportin' the spotlite, to ducking it in the darkness of the danceclub. Working girl holds 6 DJ residencies at home in New York City, starting on Monday at Muzak is Skool. Sparkling non-stop this star still don't fade to Black @ Club Exit on Saturday.

You love it, that for one weekend this month, the lucky lady's gonna be working her paid holiday here in Hawaii!?!?

OK, back to class action. "...expand your mind, don't fall into MTV..."

Girlina's impassioned, but she don't preach. She knows she can reach you through her music and intends to.

"Timelessness" is one trait her ear's tuned to, which you'll hear apparent in the tracks she'll be laying down... 'cause once she finds the way, she takes you there. And don't doubt:

"Young or old, I will have you up and on the dance floor." You heard!?!?

Now move!

Top 3 Reasons NOT to Vote this November:

3. As a gay couple we have all the same protections and benefits of a heterosexual couple, so we don't need the legal rights of marriage.
2. If my landlord found out we were gay and kicked us out, it would give us an opportunity to live on the beach.

According to Gabbard, since the most pressing issue is homeland security and national defense, everything depends on our state and nation being safe and secure. Without this security, the economy will plummet and the federal deficit will rise. He cites 9/11 as proof of this postulate. He's in favor of medical malpractice reform and the Unborn Victims of Violence Act; against "partial-birth" abortion and believes a teenager should not be able to get an abortion without parental notification.

Gabbard has steadfastly refused to be interviewed by journalists, insisting that all questions be emailed to him.

Representatives, district 40

Carolyn Golojuch

"If more people believed in justice, equality would be reality!" This is the motto of Carolyn Golojuch, the Democratic candidate for District 40's seat in the State House of Representatives. As president of the O'ahu chapter of Parents, Families and Friends of Lesbians, Gays, Bisexual, Transgender and Questioning Persons (PFLAG), and the first person from Hawai'i to be named to the national board of PFLAG, she has been fighting for equal rights for her gay son as well as others in the GLBT community for nine years. She is an active supporter of the Hawai'i Hate Crimes Act and the non-discrimination policy with the DOE/BOE. She is one of our community's most steadfast supporters.

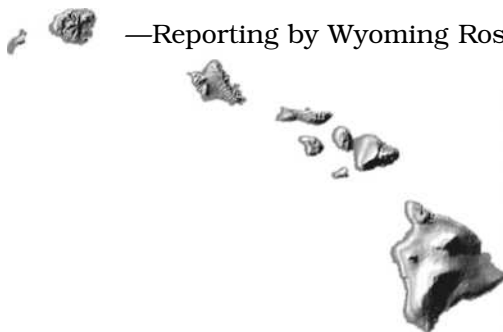

Golojuch can be described as a cheerleader for education, and her love for learning plays a big part in her platform. She has pledged to work towards getting necessary improvements in our schools as soon as possible as she feels they are overcrowded and understaffed. She wants to see the completion of the UH – West O'ahu Campus, because she believes it would ensure continuing education and new jobs and taxable revenue for our economy.

Golojuch plans on working with the O'ahu Metropolitan Planning Organization to pursue transportation alternatives, road improvements and a new North-South Road with an effective interchange to help address the congestion of our growing community.

Golojuch believes our waste management system has been neglected for 25 years and she plans on exploring recycling as well as new disposal methods that will also create jobs.

DaKine magazine endorses Carolyn Golojuch.

Men's Mix: One

www.tlareleasing.com

DVD/VHS $24.99

A Rich Blend

TLA's first collection of gay male-centered short films (excepting 2003's Two Brothers & Two Others, which included a pair of shorts by yours truly) is a diverse package. Unlike some other collections, the seven shorts in this one are more humanistic in nature and less explicitly sexual and shirtless boy-driven—which isn't to say attractive guys or frisky behavior is totally absent.

Iranian actress Maryam Karimi's Burl's kicks things off on a superbly produced, affirming note. A preteen's (Chandler Kane Kelly) queerness is just beginning to bubble up—he's smitten with a hunk working at the pet shop and he gets caught in drag—much to the chagrin of his father (John de Lancie, well known to sci-fi geeks as Star Trek's Q). Humorous and light, despite the presence of a creepy pedophile character, Burl's is clearly a calling card for Karimi: her accessible directorial style would be well suited for higher-end television comedy.

In Touched, lonely middle-aged Mike (QVC's Bob Bowersox) finds himself cruised at a gay bar by a smolderingly handsome 20-something, Michael (David Duzenski), and they go home together. But this won't be a typical one-night stand. Writer/director Mike Lemon, a Philadelphia-based casting director by day, based this involving, well-done and thoughtful piece on a real life experience. The writing and Bowersox's performance dip into oversincerity at times, but this is ultimately a work of substance and heart.

From dialogue-driven to dialogue free, next we have the breezy 10 Pesos, which follows the titular currency note as it passes hands over a day's time. In Safe Journey, a desperate, battered, young hustler connects with a recently widowed, older gay man who's losing his sight. While bearing a slight resemblance to Touched in its themes, as well as its lost and lonely protagonists, Safe Journey packs nowhere near the same punch—it smacks of calculated, simulated depth, and struck me as the Mix's weakest entry.

At only four minutes, director Johnny Symons' grainy, black and white Shaving The Castro is a brief but intriguing snapshot of a 50-year-old barbershop in San Francisco's legendary gay neighborhood, and the changes it's seen. In the much longer, cartoonishly screwball Gaydar, queeny office worker Randy (Terry Ray) comes into possession of a pistol-like device that gauges whether someone's a homo.

Although a brilliant premise, and boasting some delicious laughs (and a wonderful Jim J. Bullock cameo), Gaydar director Larry LaFond doesn't let Randy go hog-wild with this dream device as any screeching, horny queen would, and squanders running time on a pointless Charles Nelson Reilly appearance.

Men's Mix goes out on an, er, up note with J.T. Tepnapa's MASTURBATION: Putting The Fun In Self-Loving, a deliriously demented, perfectly raunchy parody of 1950s schoolhouse health education reels. Perverse Dr. Winston (Travis Michael Holder) teaches wide-eyed young Billy (Adam Browne)—who, to my utter amusement, keeps exclaiming "Jeepers!" and the like—the many ways of "Jackin' The Beanstalk," each of which are acted out by a handful of hotties. Hey TLA—more mix, please!

Father's Day

by Philip Galanes

216 pages. New York, Alfred A. Knopf. $22.95.

Not so many years ago, one of the popular theories put forward to explain male homosexuality was the presence in the home of a domineering mother and a weak or absent father. Most serious researchers on the subject have abandoned that theory by now, but over the period of its popularity, much was written about gay men and their relationship to their fathers... and their mothers, too, of course. It seems the subject has not been given up entirely, at least not in Philip Galanes's debut novel, Father's Day.

This is not to say, however, that Galanes is trying to explain the cause of his narrator's—Matthew Vaber—homosexuality. Matthew and his creator take that as a given in his life with no explanation required. Rather, Matthew is concerned about why his father has committed suicide and whether some blame for this act shouldn't be attributed to Matthew himself. He sets about to tell us his story and his father's story and his mother's story—using his somewhat undependable observations—moving from the present to the past and back again endlessly.

Now, to return those earlier stereotypes for a moment: An impartial listener to Matthew's tale would have to conclude that his father was both weak and, at least emotionally if not actually physically, absent. Dad was given to long solitary walks in the woods and to hiding in his study after dinner, playing the same songs over and over again on his record player. What interactions the father had with his son, however, were always gentle and patient, sometimes, given the circumstances, remarkably so, and Matthew felt a definite fondness for his father; but at the same time he viewed him as "the competition" and wanted him out of the way. Competition for what? The love of his father's wife, Matthew's mother.

It seems that Matthew was always scheming, even as a little boy, to denigrate his father in his mother's eyes so that he could be closer to his mother and they could be two against one. From Matthew's descriptions, his mother could certainly be considered domineering, but Matthew, as he has matured, seems to have caught on to her tricks and is able to counter them when necessary.

So if this weak father and domineering mother are not to be accused of making their son gay, what have they done? Well, they may have helped to turn him into a neurotic mess who seems not so much incapable of having, but afraid to have, a meaningful relationship with another man. Matthew's preference is for telephone sex and bathhouses while he seeks to find, and torpedo, more meaningful relationships.

Father's Day is not as grim as it may sound from the above. The writing is good, and the narrator's analysis of his situation is not without humor and insight. The interested reader may at times want to shake Matthew until his teeth rattle, but he is not a character who can be ignored or easily abandoned.

To Rococo Rot

Hotel Morgen

Domino Records www.dominorecordco.com

Most of humanity's music has its roots grounded in eras long past, when the world seemed to move more slowly. Now that we're comfortably into the 21st century, it's clear that the digital menace is well upon us. Most of us now stare into bright lights for several hours per day (i.e. computer and television screens) while we willingly allow phone signals to run through our brain (i.e. the cellular phone). As an anthropologist once commented, the human race has become a species of cyborgs. And looking at the music that has come out of our era, we see a plethora of samplers, synthesizers and beat boxes creating a sound as dull and metallic as a car engine.

Now, this may all sound gloomy and pessimistic, like a rehash of Orwell's 1984 and other cheerful dystopias, but the technological explosion does bring up an issue. We can either let technology dull our senses, turning us into automations, (Simply think of the oh-so-easy pleasures of remote controls, self-cleaning ovens and vibrators.) or we can use the same technology to reconfirm our humanity, to create a music that changes the neon lights, concrete and steel structures and plasma televisions into a warm, living space.

Enter To Rococo Rot. For nearly a decade, the Berlin-based ensemble has been making their own distinctive form of art house electronica. Before you think of chill out beats and breathy vocals, remember that this is the same country that invented Kraftwerk and the Love

Parade. Performed mostly on electronic and digital equipment, the group's music belongs to the contemplative spaces of our time—the hallowed white spaces of galleries and museums, airy lofts, vistas of buildings and freeways. Unsurprisingly, To Rococo Rot began when its members, brothers Robert and Ronald Lippok, and Stefan Schneider created music for Berlin art installations.

Hotel Morgen, the group's fourth studio release, is the warmest project to date. The group still relies on their signature beeps and whirs. But gone is the cacophony that permeated their earlier work.

1999's The Amateur View featured lush soundscapes suddenly or continually interrupted by acidic touches, rather like screeching car breaks on a quiet morning. The emphasis in Hotel Morgen, in contrast, is on creating a unified tapestry of sound. This time, technology creates newfound warmth, similar to how synthetic fibers can now blend into a fabric as soft as cashmere.

And though the atmosphere is harmonious, that doesn't mean there's not a spirit of surprise. Take the track "Feld": The song builds on a muted pulse, the same tempo as a classic house beat. The electronics gradually swirl around and build, creating a growing expectation for a bounding 4/4 beat to kick in. But "Feld" eludes: the approaching storm fades away like the roll of the waves. It's not the machine that's in control here, but human sensibility. And that's the beauty of To Rococo Rot. The modern, mechanical world is never hidden but neither is the humanity behind it.

HIFF Celebrates 100+ Great Movies... and One Great Actress

For eager Hawai'i film buffs, the return of the annual Louis Vuitton Hawai'i International Film Festival can't come soon enough. Happily for them, this year's celebration of cinema, featuring dozens of feature films, documentaries, shorts and animated movies from around the world, begins its ten day O'ahu run on October 21st. The Signature Dole Cannery 18 Theatres serve as the festival's home once again, with some of the movies slated to appear at both the Honolulu Academy of Arts Doris Duke Theater and the Hawai'i Theatre Center. A special addition to this year's event will be the presentation of LVHIFF's first award for achievement in acting to Hong Kong actress Maggie Cheung, currently appearing on Hawai'i screens in Hero, with Jet Li. She is being honored for an illustrious body of work encompassing nearly 80 films in the last twenty years.

Here are some films that may be of special interest to our readers:

A compelling documentary of a young orphaned girl who is adopted by a male couple that raises her like a daughter. She is grown up now and lovingly calls them Daddy and Uncle. Doris Duke Theatre, Wednesday, Oct 27, 3:30pm

Tying The Knot

An acutely topical documentary that discusses the same-sex marriage debate that has become such a hot political issue in this presidential election year. Chronicling several gays and lesbians as they pursue their civil and constitutional right to be married, this documentary also touches upon this issue when it was raised in Hawai'i in the late 90s.

Taking

Time with Thommie

By Thommie Drewan

It was one week after Jake's 40th birthday, and Bradley's strange departure with the relentlessly obnoxious Rory Stennis, that the first phone call arrived. I was sitting at my computer, failing miserably at contriving an intriguing plot twist for my newest novel, Blankety-Blank Love. For a writer there is nothing scarier than a blank page—or blank screen, as it so happened. The ringing of the phone saved me from the glaring whiteness and the abject fear it engendered.

"Backstage, Gone with the Passing Wind," I answered. "Miz Scarlett speaking. Is that you, Ashley?"

Bradley: Um...no. I think I have the wrong number. Thommie: Bradley! Wait! It's me.

Br: Oh. But you said—

Th: It was a joke, B.

Br: Oh. Yes. It was very funny.

Th: Gee, thanks. With a ringing endorsement like that, it's a wonder I haven't had my own HBO special yet.

Br: I look forward to seeing it.

Th: Where are you?

Br: Denver.

Th: What the hell are you doing in Denver?

Br: Rory had some work here and he brought me along for company.

Th: Maybe he just needed an alibi. (Pause) Ha-ha. (Pause) Bradley? You still there?

Br: Yes. I gotta go. What was that thing you're doing for HBO again?

Th: I have the title role in the new musical, Black Like Me.

Br: That's nice. We'll be sure to catch it. Click

I sat staring at my cell phone, wondering what the hell had just happened, when Jake came into my study. "Uh-oh...forget how to dial again?" He flopped into the leather easy chair I keep by the desk just for him.

I closed the phone and put it down. "That was Bradley. Or at least I think it was Bradley." He nodded for me to continue. "He's in Denver with that Stennis person. Business, he says."

"Well, I think it's nice our little boy has found himself a man."

"No you don't."

"I don't?"

"Of course not. At least, not this man. He makes me think of the wolf in Little Red Riding Hood."

"And that would make Bradley...um...Little Red?" I nodded. "So, that leaves you as Granny?"

"I'm being serious, Jake. Something is rotten in Bradleyland."

"Oo, I tink our widdle Thommie is jealous."

"Eat me, Jake."

"Sorry, I don't do junk food."

Another week-and-a-half had passed and I was typing up a frenzy. Something in my conversation with Jake had clicked a switch into the 'on' position. I decided to give my teenage hero a bit of unexpected drama. He discovers, quite by accident, that his loving older sister is actually his birth mother and that the parents who had raised him are indeed his grandparents. Adding to his angst is the fact that throughout his pre-driving license teen years his "sister" had driven him to most of his Internet-arranged sexual encounters. When he recalls how she would eagerly beg for details after each date, he throws up. "Damn I'm good!" I said out loud as I hit 'Save.'

I was in the kitchen getting a reward plate of Krispy Kreme doughnuts and a diet Coke when the phone rang. I glanced at the caller ID: It was Bradley. The doughnuts, I thought, can wait—a phrase one seldom hears from me.

Th: Well, hello, stranger. How the hell have you been?

Br: Fine.

Th: Really? You don't seem to have that old Bradley bounce we all love.

Br: For God's sake, I said I'm fine. Let it drop already.

Th: Yikes. Consider it dropped. (Pause) So Bradley, I've missed talking to you, and you weren't answering the phone, so I drove around to your apartment to see you. Guess what? It was empty. But you probably already know that.

Br: Rory thought it made more sense for us to be living in the same place, so as a surprise he called my landlord and said I was canceling my lease. I came home last week to find moving men packing my life into boxes and carrying them to Rory's place.

Th: My god, weren't you pissed?

Br: Not after Rory explained that he knew that if I had thought about it, I would've done the same thing.

Th: (I gave him a quizzical look, then realized he probably couldn't see it over the phone) Would you have?

Br: Rory says so, so, sure, yeah, I guess so. Oh—he also found someone to move into my old place so I wouldn't be stuck paying off the lease.

Th: The little dear.

Br: AND he sold my car because, like he says, one of us isn't going to be going anyplace without the other, so why have two cars? He thinks of everything. Oh, God, look at the time. If Rory's dinner isn't on the table when he arrives, he gets scary.

Th: Enough about him. How are things at the fire station?

Br: Actually, I haven't been going lately. I'm using up my vacation time. Rory said we needed some bonding time so he called my captain and arranged some time off.

Dearest Uncle Andy

Just recently I finally got a computer and I've been having a fabulous time visiting the gay sites and taking part in the gay chats. I have a lot of observations to make about the unattractive side I've seen of our community "on line," but I'll save it and maybe write a letter to your editor instead. My question comes from something to do with the chat rooms.

Although I was nervous about trying it, I finally gave in and tried meeting some men through the most popular of the chat rooms. I "chatted" with one man for quite a while before deciding it was someone I wanted to meet. His picture was cute and we had things in common. I drove to his apartment, very excited about this first encounter. The man who opened the door, however was a good 30 years older than the guy in the picture. When I asked him about that he said that the picture was of him from a couple of years before (a couple, yeah!). I told him that wasn't nice and he asked whether I was one of those shallow gays who are only interested in looks? I was so ashamed that I stayed and had a not good time at all.

The second person I went to meet I asked him what was his age before I agreed to come over. The age he gave matched the picture pretty much. But when I got over there, he wasn't even the same guy as in the picture, and he wasn't anywhere near my type. When I told him no way was I staying because he hadn't played fair, he started to cry. I felt so bad that I stayed. Once again, it was no good.

I didn't handle either case very well and I know it, but I so much hate hurting people's feelings that I don't know what else I could have done. This will probably happen again so how do I handle it?

First: Stop expecting the guys on the Internet to be telling the truth about themselves. It's a magical fairyland where you can be whoever you want, an attribute that's exploited by quite a few net denizens. It's only when the "reveal" occurs that you discover down which garden path you've been led.

Second: If you're going to continue meeting guys this way, arrange to get together somewhere other than their home or yours. Meet at a coffee shop or something. It's so much easier to walk away from someone who turns out to be less than they advertised when you are in a public place. If they're truly and horribly different than the web picture, you can even leave before meeting them, but that's too rude for me to even suggest it.

There's this friend that I've been hanging out with for several weeks. I feel like we've been developing a really close relationship. We like the same movies and love the same restaurants. We're able to laugh at silly things and discuss important things. We spend all our time together and never seem to tire of each other's company. He's basically everything I've always hoped to find in a man and expected to find in a boyfriend. So imagine how stunned I was when I suggested that we take things to the next level and begin dating for real only to have him tell me no because I'm not his type. When I asked him what his type is, he said it was someone who doesn't look like me.

I'll be the first to admit that I'm not a magazine model, but children don't cry in my presence and women don't faint from fear when I enter a room. Him turning me down for a reason like that hurt more than anything has in a very long time. If he was a twink, I might understand it, but he's in my age group, which is mid-40s. Although he's tried to see me several times since then, I'm avoiding him. Mostly because I don't know how to react. I like him, but right now I think I hate him, too. I feel like I've wasted a major portion of my life that I'll never get back. I know I should have handled things better at the time, since I basically did nothing at all but cry and run away. What should I have done? What would you have done? What should I do now?

Sadly, it's too late to make a statement that's both effective and timely; to do so this long after the event would only make you look pathetic. If something like this ever happens again—and I certainly hope it doesn't; no one deserves such treatment—try responding with this: "So, your type isn't considerate, supportive, caring, loyal, loving, smart and funny? Just what is your type then?"

Generally, I frown on the idea of throwing away friendships. But this is a tough case—not because he rejected you, but because he did it so blithely over something so superficial with no apparent concern for your feelings. That's not something friends do. Further, his declaration that you are not worthy of him because your looks don't meet his high standards has erected a barrier that will be difficult to ignore; the 800-pound gorilla, so to speak.

You should start by talking to your friend. He may be feeling really badly about how he handled things; you wouldn't know since you've been ignoring him. Give him a chance to speak before you decide your next step. After listening to him, you may well decide that the friendship is too precious to abandon—most are. The big challenge, in addition to that barrier and the hurt to your emotions, will be to rediscover your lost self-esteem. If he's a true friend, he'll help you with that.

Of course, if nothing in that last paragraph happens, it'll be time to move on and find another friend who is not quite as insensitive.

Following the court's decision, another fundamentalist preacher declared that the celebration of gay culture is "an abomination to God." The Catholic Archbishop of New Orleans denounced it for activities that "glorify and exploit sexual excess."

Insurance for Pets, Not for DPs

Four Fortune 500 companies—Home Depot, Sprint, Ecolab and Waste Management—came under fire in September for their decision to offer pet insurance as an employee benefit while refusing to provide domestic partner insurance to their gay employees.

One day after this story was reported by 365gay.com, a gay Internet news site, Home Depot announced that it had changed its position and would now include domestic partner insurance in its benefit package.

Prior to Home depot's turnaround, only Sprint was slated to receive a passing grade in the annual Human Rights Campaign's annual Corporate Equality Index. [Ed note: Ecolab refuses to respond to the HRC questionnaire and is not rated.] With Home Depot's change in policy, its grade has been raised to a 71, equaling Sprint's passing score.

While all four companies include gays and lesbians in their nondiscrimination policies, none of them include gender identity.

Military Not Harmed by Out Gays

A study prepared by the University of California's Center for the Study of Sexual Minorities in the Military has concluded that gays and lesbians have been serving openly in the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan without negatively affecting unit cohesion or the military mission. According to the report, when gays serve openly, they enjoy a "greater success in bonding, morale, professional advancement, levels of commitment and retention and access to essential support services."

The study also reported that the "Don't Ask, Don't Tell" policy has a deleterious effect on more than just those service people forced to remain in the closet. By forcing gays to lie about something as fundamental as their sexuality, an atmosphere of distrust and dishonesty is created for those around them as well, causing disrespect for the law and the principles of integrity that are a foundation of military service.

Las Vegas Craves Krave

The Las Vegas strip welcomed its first gay club at the beginning of this month when Krave, created by the former owner of West Hollywood's landmark gay bar RAGE, opened next door to the Aladdin Hotel. Jeffrey Sanker, the mastermind behind some of the nation's biggest gay events and parties, has been hired to produce the entertainment.

The first show will be "Everything You Desire," which is designed to give clients the freedom to experience music from the greatest DJs and amazing lighting and sound, as well as "tantalizing" restaurants and bars, all in a "captivating, intriguing and sensual interior," according to the developer.

In recent years, Las Vegas has become a major gay destination, particularly for the Hawai'i gay community. ▼

DEREK CALIBRE'S ASTRO-TAROT FORECAST

Libra

September 23 – October 22

You've got a tender heart these days, Libra. Try distancing yourself from a relationship issue to help you understand it. Make people happy only because you want to, not to placate them. You'll demonstrate therapeutic work with or on your hands. Redesigning a corner of your house gives you a comforting sense of home. Irish eyes are smiling.

Scorpio

October 23 – November 21

Science weighs in on a mystery about the Universe, but there are still no sure answers. Questions about your own life are also unresolved as yet, Scorpio. Many situations regarding your future remain up in the air, so all you can do is to continue exploring, looking for the path you want to take. Cut a lover some slack and see a turnaround in his or her behavior.

Sagittarius

November 22 – December 20

The leaves in New England started turning color early, in August. A late tropical storm will cause trouble this year. Events out of sync tell you to sleep and eat in rhythm with nature. Before starting anything, use your feelings to determine if it's the right time. Leave the house early to get to appointments on time. Taking care of details and the mundane aspects of life ensures continuous cash flow.

Capricorn

December 21 – January 19

News from Japan concerns energy and the generation to come. Make yourself small for you'll be traveling in cramped quarters. Be patient with inconveniences and plan for contingencies. Copy and safeguard extra keys, Capricorn. A stained article of clothing isn't meant to be yours. Your image or appearance will receive repeated attention.

Aquarius

January 20 – February 18

Someone will tell you to still your mind or body while work happens around you. A step backward helps confirm you're ready to move forward again. Consider a problem from a cost/benefit point of view, as well as in the light of experience, and a decision will be made more easily. A rare or once-in-a-lifetime experience is thrilling.

Pisces

February 19 – March 20

An explosion on Earth will be visible from space. Research delves into resilience of a microscopic world and how nature heals. You've healed quite nicely from earthshaking events in your own life, Pisces. Original travel plans around Thanksgiving will be altered. The option to stay home is considered. Listen for a Dion Warwick song, which has relevance for you.

Aries

March 21 – April 19

Within forty years a flying horse will be genetically engineered. It sounds strange, but would it be wrong? Maybe not. This month look for a debate regarding the morality of genetic research. As you cultivate ambitious plans of your own, don't be surprised if there's controversy. Your curious nature leads you to the promise of something wonderful.

Taurus

April 20 – May 20

Say what you want and take chances to get it, Taurus. Check your level of preparedness, attitude and willingness to put up with crap. Organize your priorities and be okay with losing what isn't working. Results need to happen and they will. You will look younger at the end of the month than at the beginning. Be ready to be called when you're on standby status.

Gemini

May 21 – June 20

Settle in and get comfortable with a lover, Gemini. Whatever is between you will last a while. Neither of you will be inclined to talk about heavy subjects or hash out your issues. Keeping the atmosphere light helps bring about understanding and respect for each other. A spirit wants to make a connection with you to offer help with your creativity.

Cancer

June 21 – July 21

A commitment to a friend or client conflicts with an opportunity do something sexier. Will this sexy opportunity present itself again? With your help, Cancer, the answer is yes. You're learning how much practice and flexibility is required to make your desires a reality. Be prepared to accept an outcome that's very nice, but a little different from what you envisioned.

Leo

July 22 – August 22

You'll have to perform a balancing act with someone who is giving you the runaround. It's tricky, because you want your result, yet you can't push too hard. A black and white film clip makes a point about an aspect of your life you will soon change. You are heartier than you sometimes let on or feel, Leo. This is a strange, transitional time for you. Look to the winter months for rewards.

Virgo

August 23 – September 22

Recent physical activity was more beneficial than you think, Virgo. Prepare to play a new role, which is suited to you but awkward at first. It'll require a lot of time and concentration. You will find yourself wishing for greater detail or precision in your craft. Step back from your work, then go at it again. Seek a broad range of opinions without relying on any one.

Th: For how long?

Br: I don't know. Rory hasn't told me.

Th: Bradley, we really need to talk.

Br: I dunno. Maybe. (There's a commotion in the background. A door slams. Rory's voice rings out. "I don't smell anything cooking.") Look, I gotta go. ("You better not be on the phone instead of doing your work.") No, sir, I'm not. (Suddenly I hear Rory right next to the phone. "You're lying. You know what that means..." I hear the phone being wrestled out of Bradley's hand.)

Rory: He can't talk to you now.

Th: Why not?

Ro: Because I said so.

Th: Here's an idea, why don't you get a life—one that doesn't include you telling me which friends I can talk to.

Ro: He's not your friend anymore; he's with me now.

Th: Now there's a fate worse than death.

Ro: Click

Jake and I were enjoying the vanilla bean cheesecake at TGI Friday while I reiterated the phone call. This was one of those times when nothing had to be exaggerated for effect.

"I think we need an intervention," Jake said.

"You mean like put a bag over his head, throw him into a van and drive out into the country?" Jake nodded. "And deprogram him?" Jake nodded a bit more earnestly. "Isn't that a bit drastic?" Jake's head bobbed like a bigheaded doll on a dashboard.

"I'll get the van if you'll get the bag," he offered.

"And the deprogrammer?"

"A baseball bat should do the trick," he declared happily.

Just to check, the next day I dialed Bradley's number. I was far from surprised when I was greeted with three ascending beeps and the polite voice telling me that the number I'd dialed had been disconnected or was otherwise out of service.

The next weekend I dropped by the post office to mail off the new chapters to my publisher. I was standing at the little worktable, filling out the various forms required to get my package to its intended destination or else, when my eyes wandered to the bulletin board, stopping on the poster of "Most Wanted" bad guys. What a bunch of scalawags, as Jake would say. Yet there was one...

I blanched, grabbed the poster and my package—it could be mailed later—and ran out of the post office.

I was thoroughly breathless when I reached Jake's door and began pounding, too weak to pull out my own key. He answered, disheveled from a nap. "You've got...to see...this!" I managed to get out before collapsing into his arms. He pulled me into the living room and dropped me on the couch, taking the now crumpled paper from my hand.

"What's to see? It's just pictures of a bunch of scalawags." Do I know him or what?

"Get me a pencil," I said. I put the poster down on the coffee table, took the pencil and began to alter one of the shots.

"Okay, so you've drawn a goatee on one of the photos. Isn't that just a little juvenile even for you?" He looked at the shot, then looked again and his eyes grew wide. "Holy-moly!"

"Holy-moly indeed," I said.

"It looks like we got us another 'uh-oh' moment."

"I do believe you're right," I said, and shuddered. ▼

Men in Movies: Episode 181

As the theme music for Men in Movies begins to swell, the latest announcer intones, "It's time again for Men in Movies. Here's Dick and Harry, the guys that help separate the men from the boys... usually with a crowbar."

The lights come up partway before jamming, leaving the two stars in shadow. A slender silhouette is wildly gesticulating toward a silhouette that is anything but slender. As the music ends, Dick is declaiming angrily, "...fool leaves a cream puff in his pock—" He is interrupted by hissing from off-stage. "What? Oh, great!" His shadowy outline moves to one of the tall stools; his partner, Harry, moves to the other stool, his shadowy mouth licking the final bits of powdered sugar from his shadowy fingers.

"Is it too much to ask that we get some frickin' lights up here?" Dick asks. Two hunky production assistants rush forward and shine large flashlights on the duo. "God, I hate cable," Dick mutters. Looking at last into the camera, he begins. "If you're the type who picks his porn based on a clever title, I'm here to remind you of that warning from Latin 101, Caveat emptor: Let the buyer beware. As we discover with our first video, Frat House Frenzy, like a Republican's campaign promise or a cute guy cruised in a dimly lit bar at 2am, sometimes things are not as they seem. The only 'frat house' to be seen in this flick from XTC Studios is the one behind the opening credits. The video itself was shot primarily in an adult novelty shop."

"Actually," Harry says, "that's sort of what my frat house looked like. At least the guys had big Greek letters on their shirts and looked to be sort of college age. That was enough to get me in the spirit of the academic premise. And those things they were doing with the dildos they'd shoplifted were just like my initiation. Ah, school days..."

"Get a grip," Dick demands. "Good god, Harry, that's not what I mean! You want to get us cancelled?" He turns back to the audience. "Despite Harry's dip into his scholastic past, there is no 'premise' to this movie. It's merely a passably catchy bit of alliteration slapped onto a video reread. This movie doesn't deserve more than a C-, and only if you're grading on a curve. And there's not a grade low enough for the DVD extras."

"Okay then, I guess that's a thumbs down from Dick, but I'm pretty sure Dorm Days from Chi Chi LaRue got his juices churnin'. In this video, nubile students spend their idle moments on campus exploring each other, a pastime best typified by one young man's curiosity over a sleeping nude roommate. Such youth, such charm such innocence—" "Perhaps a little too much innocence," Dick interjects. "Like that young man who asks 'What is that?' as his buddy strokes himself through his briefs. Hello?!?! What does it look like it is? Chi Chi's usual creativity is totally absent from this movie. It's just borderline college twinks and porn by the numbers. Even something trying to pass as a surprise ending can't rescue this from the depths of Porn 101."

"What is wrong with you this week? Every video can't be a work of art." "Settle down, big boy. If it'll shut you up, I'll give it one finger up." "Don't you mean one thumb up?" "Not in this case. And that does it for yet another week. That's Harry and I'm Dick, reminding you that sometimes a good title is just a good title."
